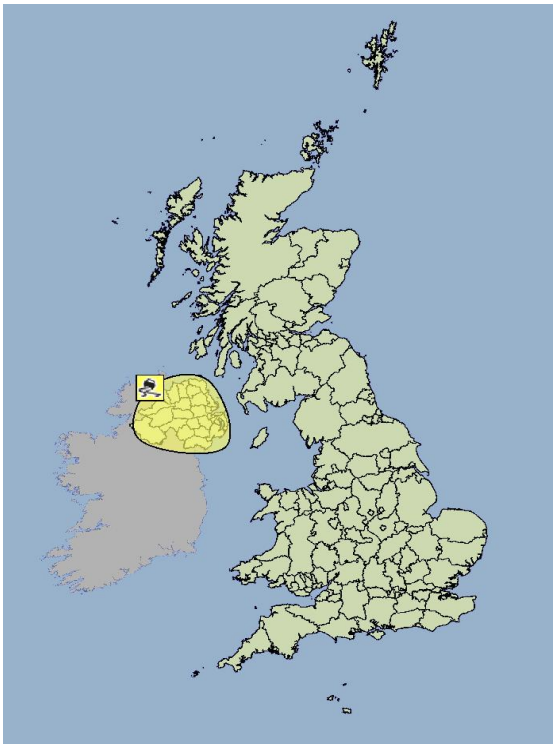
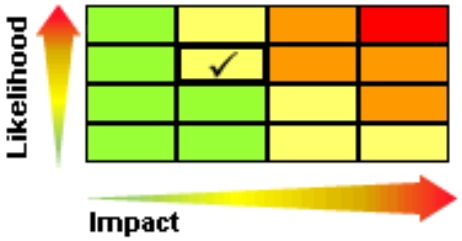
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Frequent showers will affect Northern Ireland during Thursday, falling as sleet and snow at times with some slight accumulations possible above 200 m. These showers will become less frequent and fall increasingly as rain overnight into Friday.

Surface temperatures are expected to fall widely below freezing on Thursday evening across Northern Ireland with ice then forming. With showers continuing to affect Northern Ireland, particularly western parts, some wash off is also possible.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 19:00 on Thu, 15th Feb 2018 until 10:00 on Fri, 16th Feb 2018

Ice is expected to form on some untreated roads, pavements and cycle paths on Thursday evening, overnight and into Friday morning.

Some injuries are possible from slips and falls on icy surfaces.
